

Neuropsychological Services, P.C., is a private practice in Manhattan. The externship program focuses on Neuropsychological Evaluations of children, adolescents, and young adults. The extern will see a wide range of clients including individuals with Neurological Disorders, Language Disorders, Learning Deficits in Reading, Writing, and Arithmetic, Autism Spectrum Disorder, ADHD, Executive Functioning problems, Social/Emotional issues, Verbal and Non-Verbal Memory Disorders, as well as Giftedness.

Over the years, I have trained students in doctoral programs in neuropsychological testing. Students will initially be trained in the use of neuropsychological tests and practice administrations of those tests, while also observing evaluations. Once they are comfortable with testing, they will administer tests to clients under close supervision. When students are competent in testing and scoring, they will work more independently on evaluations. Externs may also conduct school observations and tour special education schools, as well as have the opportunity to participate in parent feedback sessions. Students can also participate in assisting families and children with remediation of executive functioning skills.

There will be a didactic component to the training which will include learning neuropsychological aspects related to the brain in order to interpret test results necessary for diagnosing and writing about various disorders. Students will receive individual and group supervision. Overall, there is extensive supervision in all areas of testing and report writing and I am always available to students.

The externship is from September through mid-June. Two days a week are required, Friday being a mandatory day. One can also test on the weekend if they choose. (Students receive a travel stipend). Work may be conducted in a hybrid model.
